

ABSTRACT

A method of managing risk in a security that is based on the prospective income of a performer includes a step of defining an asset value based on the prospective income of the performer, the asset value defining a security value. The method further includes defining a minimum acceptable final valuation. Thereafter, a first account is established and funds in an amount substantially equal to or greater than the minimum acceptable final valuation are received into the first account.